MEET OUR FOUNDER

700X400

I have spent the majority of my life anxious and in a state of panic, but in 2017, it felt as if it was at an all time high.

I was going through several transitions between selling my first business, taking my first full time job, relocating to a state away from my entire family and my husband was transitioning from his minor league baseball career to full time job life. I felt like I had tried all possible options for living a balanced life and kept coming up empty-handed until I began experimenting with cannabis and CBD.

I had grown up against cannabis in large part due to Just Say No and D.A.R.E. until my 29th birthday when my sister suggested I try it as an all natural option to reduce stress and to turn off my mind from all that felt heavy. Cannabis allowed me to explore and see different perspectives and possibilities. It truly changed my life

Using CBD Oil for Chronic Pain

Cannabidiol (or CBD) one of Cannabis’ non-psychoactive compounds, has been used for hundreds of decades, as an all-natural pain reliever.

There is evidence that even Queen Victoria herself was prescribed cannabis by her doctor, to help alleviate painful menstrual cramps. There’s also substantial proof that our ancestors used parts of the cannabis plant to relieve chronic pain, long before the pharmaceutical industry was around.

A study from 2008 assessed whether or not CBD had the ability to relieve chronic pain. In the study, they analyzed hundreds of case studies from the 1980’s through the early 2000’s. Based on their findings, the researchers announced that CBD is a viable option for treating chronic pain, without any adverse side effects.

Due to its anti-inflammatory and antioxidant properties, CBD could help provide relief from the side effects of:

- Arthritis
- Osteoarthritis
- Migraines
- Joint Aches
- Menstrual cramps
- Multiple Sclerosis
- Fibromyalgia
- Post Traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD)
- Ovarian cysts
